PRINCIPLES & FUNDAMENTALS

The specific challenges of multi-brand stores
Unlike a single-brand store that follows a rigid merchandising "book", a multi-brand store faces unique challenges:

Creating your own identity: It is no longer about selling the image of a third-party brand, but about becoming a brand yourself with a strong DNA.

Making a Wardrobe: The challenge is to make collections coexist to offer a complete and complementary wardrobe.

Reassure through consistency: The customer must immediately understand why these brands are displayed side by side. The visual merchandising acts as a visual "glue" to justify the buyer's selection.

PRINCIPLES & FUNDAMENTALS

- The specific challenges of multi-brand stores
- VM Objectives
- The power of the rule of 3

Visual merchandising is not just about aesthetics; it is a measurable lever for commercial performance:
Capturing attention: Transforming the flow of passers-by into visitors by making the shop window irresistible using the rule of 3.

Make the offer easier to read: trigger the decision by organizing the products into coherent universes rather than by simple technical category.

Increase the average basket size: By presenting "silhouettes" rather than isolated pieces (the wardrobe concept), we encourage the purchase of a complete look rather than a single item.

Building loyalty through experience: Creating a memorable customer journey where the customer feels guided and inspired, thus increasing the chances of return.

CASTER VOS MANNEQUINS !

- Analysis of existing customer base
- Profile definitions
- In-store application

For a customer to understand the offer at a glance, the human eye needs odd structures, and the number 3 is the perfect balance point between "too little" and "confusion".

The Persona Method: Don't sell to "everyone". Identify three typical customer profiles (e.g., the working girl, the bohemian, the minimalist).

Casting your models: Your models must embody these profiles in a distinct way so that each customer can immediately project herself into them.

PLENTY OF CHOICE, BUT NOT TOO MUCH! THE 3 KEY POINTS

3 COLORS

One universe = three shades

3-PIECE CHANGING ROOM

To present three plays in succession that respond to each other

3 BRANDS

Multi-brand boutique = complete wardrobe

3 Colors (The Universe): Limit each display area to three dominant hues to ensure visual consistency. Use triadic schemes for a strong yet harmonious impact.

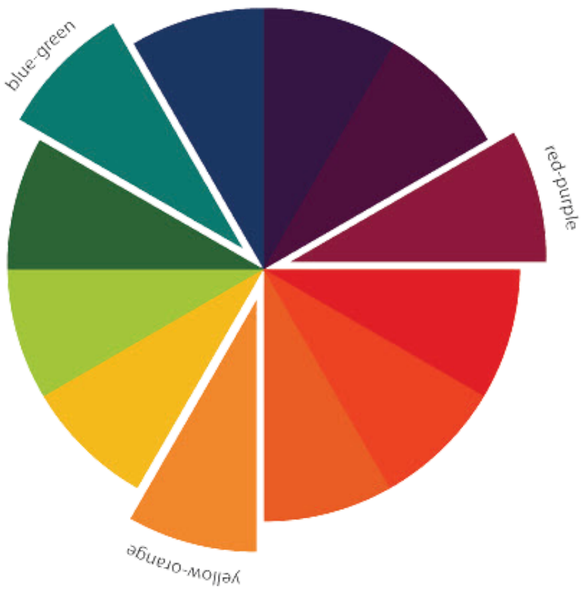

3 Brands (The Mix): Present products from three different brands within the same set to suggest a "complete wardrobe" and encourage multiple purchases and additional sales.

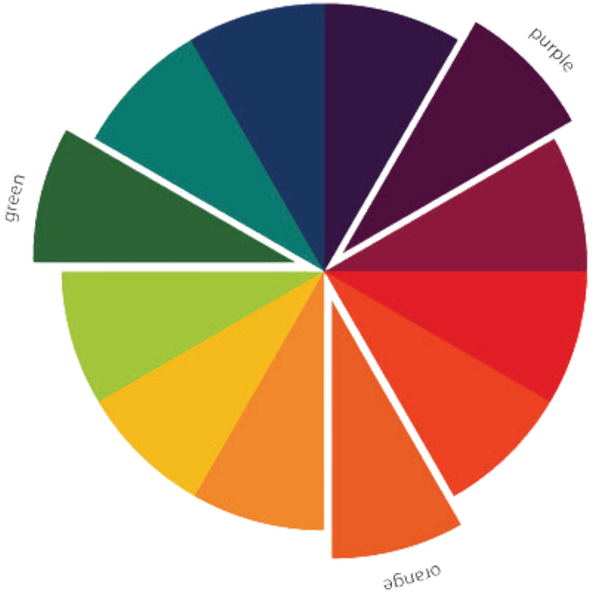

3 Pieces (The Wardrobe): Arrange pieces that complement each other (e.g., a top, a bottom, a knit top)
to make the style easier to read

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

THE INDIAN TRAIL!

- “Wazer” its clientele
- The meetings
- The recommendation
- The act of purchasing

The Customer Journey – Don't let chance guide the visit.

Create a smooth flow:
The encounters: Visual stopping points (displays).
The recommendation: Suggestions for complete silhouettes.
The act of purchasing: A flow that naturally leads to the decision-making zone.

WINDOW SHOPPING

- Connect 3 and showcase
- Display
- The decorative elements

Vitrine & Display

Shop window:
Apply the rule of 3 here too (3 mannequins, 3 heights or 3 groups of objects) to captivate the passerby.

Decorative elements:
Use accessories and furniture to bring the silhouettes to life and tell a story.

FACING & CHANGING ROOM

- Organisation
- Setup
- Interview

Transforming your storefront into a locker room

"Facing" should not be a simple display of products, but an invitation to try them.

Organization & Setup: Alternate the heights and types of products (accessories, shoes, clothing) on the same piece of furniture.

Maintenance: An effective VM requires daily rigor to remain legible.

The success of visual merchandising lies in its ability to simplify the customer's decision-making process.
By respecting this "winning trio", you boost your sales by making your offer irresistible and easy to understand.

PORTRAIT EXPERT / Sophie EDERY

Founder of BICHE BORDEAUX – Brand Strategy, Creative Engineering & Experience Design, “35 years of experience serving brand attractiveness and relational innovation…”

BACKGROUND AND PHILOSOPHY

With a background of nearly 35 years in strategic communication and project engineering, Sophie Trouillet-Edery founded BICHE BORDEAUX in 2023. Today, she combines her historical mastery of territorial dynamics and event management with a sharp expertise in offer marketing and Visual Merchandising.

Her vision: To use her experience and creativity to transform every point of contact between a brand and its audience into a memorable experience. For her, a brand must no longer simply sell a product, but embody a coherent and engaging narrative.

She possesses a 360° vision of global marketing challenges: from brand identity to its physical and digital presentation. Her approach is based on transforming strategic concepts into realities that are both sensitive and effective.
