AI-optimized inventory

The key to increased sustainability?

AI allows for better calibration of quantities, materials, sizes, colors and pricing before production.

Merchandising is optimized: underperforming items are replaced to improve the customer experience.

AI guides and confirms creative intuitions, limiting discounts, waste, and unnecessary investments – resulting in up to 30% inventory reduction.

Until 15% gross margin improvement

Until 50% productivity gains.

Validating creative intuition through data

Tracking the visibility and growth of a trend saves time.

Create the right product at the right time with real-time trend and competitor analysis.

AI makes it possible to adjust supply - style and production - to demand and therefore optimize stocks.

The first data-driven solution that combines trend and market analysis with generative AI, in order to quickly transform data and trends into product images, reduce time-to-market and limit unsold inventory.

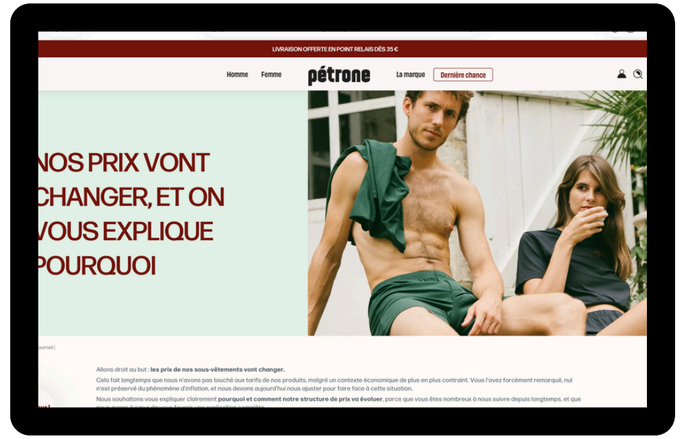
The cost of inaction

Climate change is becoming a competitive issue



Petronius

The cost of inaction, rarely isolated in a budget line, is already visible in the volatility of raw materials, regulatory complexity and its pressure on teams, as well as supply disruptions.

« Crise des marques : on oublie un facteur décisif, plus dérangeant, l'appauvrissement intellectuel et culturel de ceux qui pilotent les marques ». Benoît Heilbrunn

Benoît Heilbrunn est philosophe et codirige l'observatoire "Marques, imaginaires de la consommation et politique" au sein de la fondation Jean-Jaurès. Pour lui, les marques sont aujourd'hui en crise, par manque de créativité, mais aussi par manque de choix : elles veulent tout dire.

"The time has come for ready-to-wear brands to produce something other than narrative and to start manufacturing objects again rather than pretending to remake the world."

by Benoît Heilburn, Professor at ESCP Business School and coordinator of the Observatory "Brands, Imaginaries of Consumption and Politics", at the Jean Jaurès Foundation

« Vous croyez qu'on s'amuse à ignorer les gens ? Je fais ce que je peux… » : les recruteurs face aux candidats qui s'agacent d'être « ghostés »

Un CV envoyé, un accusé de réception automatique en retour, puis plus rien. Face à ce silence, les candidats oscillent entre frustration, résignation et adaptation. Les recruteurs, eux, invoquent un manque de temps. Deux réalités révélatrices des limites du recrutement en ligne.
